Statement of Objects and Reasons.

The necessity for replacing the existing scattered and disjointed body of rules and orders with regard to Village Offices in Mysore by a systematic scheme of legislation has engaged the consideration of Government for some time past. Of these rules and orders a few, such as the Rules* for the remuneration of patels and shanbhogs and minor village servants have the force of law; others are orders passed by Government in appeals from the decisions of Revenue Officers in regular suits ; and a large number are merely administrative orders passed on the miscellaneous side and as such liable to be disregarded by subordinate officers in regular suits. The course of decisions, too, especially in the matter of succession to Village Offices, has not been by any means always uniform or certain ; with the result—which conflicting decisions induce—of encouraging litigation. Lastly, the success of the Revenue administration depends to a great extent upon the efficiency of the village service ; and the introduction of a law to regulate the latter and place it upon a proper basis follows naturally on the introduction of the Land Revenue Code, which has governed the former for the last fifteen years.

*Issued, under the authority of the Government of India, which the Chief Commissioner's Notifichtions No. 219, dated the 27th October 1874, and No. 123, dated the 1st August 1878.

Such then is the occasion for the accompanying Draft Regulation, which, it may be observed, follows to a large extent (but with important variations) the lines of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, III of 1895, the provisions of the latter being found, on careful examination, to be much better adapted to local requirements than are those of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, III of 1874.

It now remains to describe briefly the main provisions of the proposed Regulation.

Section 2 deals with definitions.

Under the definition of " village " here given, it will be possible to declare two or more villages ordinarily so called to be a single village for the purposes of the Regulation.

The characteristics of a " Village Office " as here defined are :—

(i) the assignment of " emoluments " (a term defined comprehensively in the same section) ; and (ii) the annexing to the office of duties connected with some branch of the civil administration pertaining to a village, whether these duties are actually demanded or not.

The provisos give power to Government, on the one hand, to exclude any office from the operation of the Regulation, and, on the other, to decide whether a particular office falls under the definition or not.

The distinction drawn between " Deputy Commissioner " (a term applicable in certain cases to a Divisional Assistant Commissioner) and " District Deputy Commissioner " (denoting the Chief Revenue Officer of the District) is a convenient one, and has been taken from the Madras General Clauses Act, 1891.

Section 3 embodies the existing law with respect to the inalienability of emoluments and their non-liability to attachment and sale by Courts.

Section 4 empowers Government to group, amalgamate or divide villages, and to reduce the number of offices, in a village, as may be necessary.

Section 5 deals with the powers of Deputy Commissioners, Amildars and Inamdars to punish village officers for reasons to be recorded in writing. In consonance with the existing practice, the powers of the Deputy Commissioner to punish officers in alienated villages have been assimilated to those with respect to officers in Government villages. In Madras the latter powers are subject to restriction.

Sections 6 and 7 declare the rules to be observed in making appointments to the five main Village Offices of patel, shanbhog, nirganti, toti and talari. It is merely necessary to note that these rules will, among other things, do away with the right of females in certain circumstances to be registered as the holders of Village Offices, but not of course, so as to interfere with claims to succession being traced through females, and that the rule of devolution of succession to a single heir as laid down will exclude the performance of duties by rotation: the latter being a system attended with many difficulties, not satisfactory on the one hand to the parties concerned; and not conducive on the other to the efficiency of business, besides leading to faction, litigation, and intrigue and to a relaxation of the sense of responsibility. It may also be remarked that, under section 7, the confirmation of the Deputy Commissioner will not in future be necessary, as at present, for appointments of patels and shanbhogs made by proprietors of Inam villages.

Section 8 deals with succession in the case of other Village Offices than the five specified, where such exist and are recognized. But, as a matter of fact, it may be observed that the connection of Government with such other offices comprised in the ancient barabaluti system has practically ceased.

Sections 9 to 15 and 17 to 19 embody the usual provisions about suits, procedure, appeals, limitation, and similar matters.

Section 16 bars the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in regard to clamis for the succession of Village Offices in respect of emoluments.

Section 20 will probably become unnecessary on the passing of the Police Regulation now before Government.

Section 21 enumerates the matters in regard to which Government may frame rules; and declares that, till rules as so made, the existing rules shall continue in force.
